Performance

Global equity markets continued the negative trend of recent months. High inflation, rising interest rates, the war in Ukraine, the corona situation in China and weakening economic growth continued to depress sentiment. The returns for the various risk profiles last month ranged from -1.3% for the most defensive profile to -1.6% for the most offensive profile. The neutral risk profile achieved a return of -1.4% in May, bringing the loss for the year to 13.7%.

The table below gives an overview of the five different standard investment profiles (without bandwidths). The classifications of risk profiles are motivated by the AFM (the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets) and mainly based on historical risks and returns.

As indicated in our 2022 outlook, financial markets have entered more turbulent waters due to a number of uncertainties at play around the world. The main risk to financial markets at the moment is an economic recession (even stagflation) due to high inflation, rising interest rates and changing central bank policies. Other risks include new outbreaks and variants of the coronavirus, geopolitical tensions and additional regulation in both the West and China. This combination of risk factors can cause significant fluctuations in financial markets.

Our investment quality criteria as reflected in the 'schijf van vijf' ensure that we are well positioned to meet our expected long-term return targets, even under the current uncertain market conditions. Within equities and alternatives, we are invested in sectors that are supported by attractive long-term growth prospects in areas such as digitalization, healthcare and sustainability. Growth in these sectors is less dependent on the business cycle. In addition to companies with good growth prospects, we tend to invest in companies with high profit margins and strong market positions. These companies suffer less from inflation and have more opportunities to pass on higher costs to customers. The strong balance sheet position ensures that these companies are less affected by rising interest rates and can absorb cyclical fluctuations well.

The outlook for bonds remains slim. The risk of price declines if interest rates rise is high, while in real terms the return is eroded by high inflation. Low interest rates offer little protection against these risks. Bonds therefore primarily fulfil a role in terms of diversification in a mixed portfolio. In general, bonds are less volatile than equities, and some parts of the bond market have a low or even negative correlation with equities. Bonds thus mitigate the volatility of a mixed portfolio, and especially for investors with a shorter investment horizon, they thus fulfil an important role.

Within the bandwidths, it is possible to respond to current market conditions. We call this the tactical asset allocation. At the moment, we have opted for a very slight overweighting of equities and to a lesser extent alternatives at the expense of bonds. The more offensive the profile, the lower the weight of bonds. In the most offensive profile, we even choose not to invest in bonds at all at the moment.
